Japan’s population has been flat these years, suggesting the start of the era of a declining population. The population is projected to drop to 90 million by 2055, with an aging rate over 40%.