*Please see the following page for information about hospitalization.

2. Types of Hospitalization at Psychiatric Medical Institutions

The types of hospitalization at psychiatric medical institutions are primarily based on the Act on Mental Health and Welfare for the Mentally Disabled.

(1) Voluntary Hospitalization

If the patient intends to be hospitalized, he/she shall be admitted voluntarily. The patient shall be discharged if his/her symptoms improve and the doctor deems him/her suitable for discharge, or if the patient wishes to be discharged.

(2) Hospitalization for Medical Care and Protection

If hospitalization has been deemed necessary for the sake of medical care and protection, and the patient's family, etc. agrees to hospitalization on behalf of the patient, he/she shall be hospitalized for medical care and protection after undergoing an examination by a designated mental health doctor. In the event that there is no family, etc. that can be contacted, the consent of the mayor of the municipality shall instead be required.

(3) Emergency Hospitalization

If it is determined that the patient requires hospitalization for medical care and protection but are unable to obtain the consent of the patient's family, etc., he/she shall be hospitalized at a designated hospital on an emergency basis for a period of up to 72 hours after undergoing an examination by a designated mental health doctor.

(4) Involuntary Admission

If it is determined, after undergoing an examination by two or more designated mental health doctors, that there is a risk of the patient harming himself/herself or others, the patient shall be hospitalized involuntarily under the authority of the prefectural governor.
